

Really big ships

In other essays I introduced the idea that twin energies are entering our physical realm. This was not entirely accurate. These energetic forces have always been present in varying degrees of power or influence. What is happening is that The Age of Reason (the masculine) has the opportunity to survive the rendering of the world. This can only happen if the re-emerging Age of Feeling (the feminine) provides the support and “food” for its weaker twin. Should she choose so, the feminine could easily allow the masculine to diminish, weaken and disappear.

This is will be the most likely scenario if the feminine simply emerges, grows mighty and reveals in her power without consideration of the need for balance. Supporting a runt, or weakling, takes effort and tedious consciousness. It will not be the natural inclination.

You, as Women of Power, are the feminine. The rise of the feminine energetic force is, of, by and through you. Each of you has a manifest access to the deep channel of power that is the feminine. The challenge for you, as caretaker of the earth, will be to tap these energetic waters to ensure that seeds thrown about the energetic universe are awakened and nurtured.

Complex life has always required the contribution of the male and female. Contrary to popular belief it is not always the female who carries or cares for the new life. Regardless of the these few instances, co-ital transactions must occur to initiate renewal.

It would be reasonable for you to question whether or not you should assume the burden of finding balance. After all, the energy pendulum has swung back and forth for some time in our universe. What would be the motivation to change this course of history?

The best way to approach this problem is to look at how boats and ship move through water.

A small speed boat is fast and nubile. It can make quick turns and change course almost instantly. A turn of the wheel results in an immediate turn of the boat.

A large ship is just the opposite. Course changes take a lot of time to happen. Spinning the wheel to turn the boat will have no immediate noticeable impact. However, that turn of the wheel has caused something to happen. The ship did accept and begin its turn maneuver. A novice helmsman would not understand this and turn the wheel more when the ship did not obviously respond to the first turn. Still nothing happens so s/he turns the wheel more.

Suddenly the ship begins turning. As it comes onto the new heading the helmsman straightens out the wheel, expecting the ship to stop turning. But it does not. It keeps turning. Panicked, the helmsman cranks the wheel back the other way. You see where this is going - the effect of this delayed reaction. The ship swings back and forth more and more widely and violently as the course corrections continue in extremis. It is now out of control.

Our energetic world is like a really big ship. Each cycle has generated a broader, more erratic swing and change of course. We are close to being out of control. The next course swing, the re-emergence of the feminine may very well be the fatal one that crashes us onto the shoals.

The only way to prevent this cataclysmic event is to start the “return to course” maneuver now, in anticipation of the over swing. Small turns of the wheels, made in advance of perceived need, will bring stability to our energetic behemoth. Once stabilized and pointed in the right direction a new course, the next evolution of our species, our transcendence if you will, will be possible.

The course correction I speak of here is the protection and support of the masculine as the feminine rises. The masculine must also be encouraged and trained to support the feminine. You might wonder why the masculine can't look after itself. In the words of Dr. Phil, “How's that going for them?” Or for that matter, “How's it going for you?” Clearly looking after his/herself in isolation is not going that well.

No one should stick their head in the sand now. Each and every one of us has a role to play, a contribution to make. Whatever your talent or skill, whatever your inclination, it is critical that you step out of your self and enter this new age embracing the partnership of the whole, not the individual.

Doing so will require shedding your skins, leaving behind the controls and checks of the masculine, soothing your new exposed feminine while allowing the heat of the sun to protect and support you until your new skin hardens and provides room for your larger, more expansive and dynamic self.
